As evidence of the moral disclosure poured out in the summer of 1973, it became apparent that the common denominator of those dedicated to Nixon and in varying levels close to him was praying. There has never been as much falsehood by so many people close to any President. The legal problem, if there was to be prosecution, was to determine what the truth was, if any on this key point. Cover-up conversation made enough about what was material was not enough.

Of the only person who had spent his whole life, he could not have expressed his own files better.

No could he have composed a statement better calculated to give him the defense that he had been misled even by those in whom he had implanted total trust.

While he is the one who had primary contact with all, he one who had to know that agency was expedient - the one in actual as well as moral responsibility - he is also the one who drew to it that each of the cases lead in his own way. All were ruined by the Watergate. No reputation was not destroyed, & all he may avoid MXN.

He unwittingly at all for his own personal
